

“Moose Hunt” Character Descriptions:

Jack: a hairy, broad-chested Vermonter of 50. He has a beard and a gut and lives alone with his dog, Moose, who he treats very much like family. Jack hunts for sport and swears frequently. He enjoys smoking a pipe and drinking PBR at all hours of the day. Jack is the type of guy who doesn't go for commercial toothpaste, preferring to use baking soda and hydrogen peroxide instead. He seems crass on the outside, but when it comes to his two loves—hunting and his dog—there is no one more passionate or caring. This is also evident because Jack's girlfriend, Jeannie, recently left him due to his inability to give her the attention she desired.

Emma: an affable, college-aged girl who brings her camera everywhere to document her experiences. She is very pretty with sharp features but prefers a more subtle style. Emma is spontaneous, hates formalities, and takes pride in the fact that she is confident enough to defy gender expectations. She fascinates herself with anything “gross” that would repel the average person. She is the type of person who feels comfortable making conversation with members of all different generations, regardless of how comfortable they are talking to her. When it comes down to it, Emma will go on just about any adventure in order to have a unique experience, and one worth documenting.

Steve: a jovial, quick-witted chef who feels at home making breakfast for customers of his diner. He tells it like it is and is generally a positive person who makes you feel at ease. Most importantly, Steve is a good friend to Jack.

Waitress: while not having a significant role in the story, her presence is essential as she interacts with all three other characters while on-screen. She is older than Emma though younger than Jack and Steve, and has been working as a waitress at Steve's diner for years. She knows Jack through Steve and because he is a frequent customer of the diner, and has developed a comically flirty relationship with both of them.